5 Tasks to Automate in Your Business This Week

A free guide from DAS Digital

You don't need new software or tech skills to get time back. Here are five everyday jobs that can run on their own, and one simple first step for each that you can take this week.

1. Answer the calls you miss

When you're on a job or with a customer, calls go to voicemail and many callers simply try the next business. Set your phone to send an automatic text back to anyone you miss, or let an AI receptionist answer, take their details and text you a summary.

This week: Turn on missed-call text back with your phone provider, or write down the three questions you always ask a new caller.

2. Send appointment reminders

No-shows cost you time you can't get back. Automatic text or email reminders the day before (and an hour before) cut down on forgotten visits without anyone picking up the phone.

This week: Check whether your booking or calendar tool already has reminders you can switch on.

3. Follow up on unpaid invoices

Chasing payments is awkward and easy to put off. Most invoicing tools can send friendly reminders on a schedule and include a link to pay right away.

This week: Turn on automatic reminders at 3, 7 and 14 days past due.

4. Ask happy customers for a review

Reviews bring in new customers, but asking is easy to forget. Send a short text or email with your review link after every finished job.

This week: Get your review link and write a two-line message you'd be happy to send.

5. Reply to new leads right away

Someone who fills out your website form is ready to talk now. An instant reply lets them know you got it, and every lead lands in one list so nothing slips through.

This week: Make sure your website form sends you an alert and the customer a quick "we got it" reply.
